MOUNTAIN COLONY SAYS
MERCURY WENT TO 40
At 7:30 o'clock Friday evening the thermometer on Lookout mountain registered 40 degrees. At the same hour in the city the report was 57 degrees. The stiff breeze that swept along the mountain top variously affected the colony, some will hurry back to the city for this first visit of winter's fore-runner while others have already huddled themselves down to open town houses for the winter and place the children in school. There are residents of the mountain top who enjoy the cold months and remain there throughout the year. They declare that city folks can't half realize the beauty of autumn woods as each day the leaves are painted more brilliantly and that sunsets in the fall and winter are a more rare sight than those in summer. In many bungalows on the brow Friday night "home fires" were burning in the big open fire places and generally it was accepted that winter had come again.

NATION CRITICISED GOMPERS

And Oswald Garrison Villard Refused to Retract His Statements.

Washington.—Whether the current issue, Sept. 14, of Oswald Garrison Villard's weekly, the Nation, is to be barred permanently from the mails because it is alleged to contain matter hostile to the war policy of the government is to be determined by Postmaster-General Burleson. The circulation of the magazine is held up pending his decision.

It is said the postal officials object especially to an editorial entitled "The One Thing Needed," in the current issue. This editorial takes the Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, to Europe was doomed to failure because he had other objects in view than an investigation of the labor situation in the British empire.

Mr. Villard, while at the postoffice department Saturday, refused to withdraw the alleged offensive editorial, saying that he would sacrifice the entire edition of the Nation rather than do so. He declared it to be "an honest, patriotic and unanswerable criticism of the American labor missions."

FOE SEEKS TO ROUT THE BRITISH TANKS

London.—(Copyright, N. Y. World.)—An attempt is being made to make an intense effort to end the rout. The British tanks, which have been in France, wires the Daily Mail, a great part of his scheme is the elaboration of his defense against our tanks.

A special heavy rifle, a special armor-piercing bullet, a special group of specially trained troops, trench mortars designed for direct fire and field guns brought to bear on the British tanks, are some of the means designed to dispel his infantry's fear of tanks. A new weapon for infantry defense has been provided in the shape of what is called an automatic platoon. In reality it is a short gun with a range of about 200 yards. It fires fewer than fifty rounds without reloading and is rather handier than the rifle proper.

At the same time a new sort of combining unit formation which goes rather better than the levee on postal work, the British is under organization. Women are doing almost the work of amazons, they are taking the place of men in the front as army headquarters and numbers of boys and very young men are being called upon for auxiliary services.

This stiffening up of observation in the German front line. German troops are ordered now to hold to the death even in places from which retreat is inevitable, and they are given the maximum of artillery support.

CAEL WOMEN FOR CLERKS

Government Offices Alone Short 2,000 Stenographers.

To meet an acute and growing shortage of stenographers and typists for war work the United States employment service of the department of labor is preparing a nationwide campaign to recruit women qualified for trained clerical service. The object is to secure workers, particularly government employees, for positions classified under the civil service law.

At the present time therefore unfilled requests for upward of 2,000 stenographers filed with the women's service of the United States employment service by government offices alone. One bureau states that 600 qualified women can be placed at work immediately. An idea of the demand for war workers at the national capital is given by a statement of the United States civil service commission that approximately 13,000 stenographers have secured jobs in Washington in the past eighteen months. The number placed in the eighteen months preceding was about 1,000.

While the need is most acute in Washington, the growth of war industries and the steady influx of women war workers to the capital from all over the country has created a demand which is serious in many sections. Branch offices of the employment service all over the country have therefore been instructed to pay special attention to the recruitment of women.

Applicants who can be placed in positions in Washington which are outside the classified civil service, or in essential industries, will receive immediate appointment. The minimum beginning salary paid by the government for stenographers is usually $10.50 a year, and a similar scale is generally observed by private employers engaged on war contracts.

The employment service emphasizes the fact that no applications will be considered unless made on special registration forms provided by local offices of the employment service. These forms are now in preparation and will be distributed to the 400 branch offices in September. At the same time posters, advertisements, and newspaper notices will inform the public of the campaign.

Every application will be considered on its merits by officials of the service. Applicants whose qualifications and experience as given on their registration blanks do not for any reason warrant the employment of the service in recommending them for immediate appointment without examination will be advised to complete the work with the nearest office of the United States civil service.

YANKS IN A KING'S HOME.

Chateau de Valency Has Been Made a Resting Place for Americans.

(Stars and Stripes, France.)

"Fit for a king" is an expression often used to describe the last word in excellence. Bien! American officers in France now have a chance to spend their leaves at a chateau that is not only up to the specifications of royalty, but the actual use of the chateau as a residence for an extended period by a full-fledged monarch.

It is true, the king did not select this chateau as his happy home. But he liked it so well that after he had been detained there seven years by order of Napoleon I, he had to resort to eviction proceedings to get him off the premises.

The king was Ferdinand VII of Spain, and the chateau is that of the Duc de Valency, in the department of Indre. It seems that Napoleon, after garrisoning in his fellow monarch, handed the chateau over to the Duc de Talleyrand for safe keeping. The price was at that time living in this chateau and took Ferdinand home with him and boarded him for seven years.

When the time came for the king's sentence to expire, he had become so attached to the old homestead that he positively refused to leave until the Spaniards imposed upon him that his presence was badly needed in his own country.

The apartments formerly occupied by Ferdinand are still kept up, with all the magnificent furnishings that helped to make the place attractive to the proud Castilian. Visitors are able to view the rooms upon request, and it is the general verdict that amid such surroundings a seven-year sentence was all too short.

Through the generosity of the present Duc de Valency the chateau, which was built in the sixteenth century with its 9,000 acres of park, has been turned over to the American Y. M. C. A. to be used as a club for officers on short leave. Officers on duty in the supply and training areas who wish to spend week-end, over-night and single-day leaves will find it the ideal spot.

In addition to its attraction as the former abiding place of a genuine king, the chateau has many facilities for golf and tennis. There will be an American hostess and American meals and various other things to make a Yankee officer feel at home. Madame de Barbe de Selliers, an American by birth and aunt of the Duc de Valency, will be patroness.
